

First Wilderness Heritage Corridor

TOWN AND VILLAGE OF CORINTH

Corinth's Link to the First Wilderness

The Corinth Destination Stop is the southern terminus of the study area and builds on the First Wilderness experience by capitalizing on key historic events, flat-water recreation opportunities, and recently completed community projects. With regard to history, Corinth was once known as Jessup's Landing, the site where logs were gathered from the Hudson, landed, and hauled over land in order to bypass Palmer Falls. South of the falls, the logs were sent to the site of the "Big Boom," and floated downriver. When the railroad opened, Corinth was a major sawmill site.

The plan elements include rehabilitating the historic train station, trolley access from the restored station to Main Street area and providing streetscape improvements in the village and to the train station for enhanced pedestrian access. Waterfront park improvements and pedestrian connections to existing parks will enhance the recreational amenities in the community as well as providing gathering area for festivals and events. Marketing and business attraction programs and commercial infill will also further enhance the community's economic foundations.

Current day recreational activities include flat water recreation and walking Jessup's Pathway that connect two community parks. There are also opportunities to shop along Main Street. Plan elements include rehabilitating the old train station, constructing a trolley drop-off along Main Street, enhancing the pedestrian environment by constructing sidewalks, creating an historic interpretive program and developing infill retail and tourism services.
